The City of Toronto is seeking applicants to join the Aboriginal Affairs Advisory Committee who can help support self-determination and equitable outcomes for Aboriginal peoples by bringing First Nations, Inuit and Métis voices to the table.

The Committee's mandate is to provide advice to City Council on the elimination of barriers faced by First Nations, Inuit and Métis related to City by-laws, policies, programs and services. It also liaises with external groups to address barriers to the participation of Aboriginal peoples in public life, and works to advance the social, cultural, economic and spiritual wellbeing of Toronto's Aboriginal communities.

The Committee typically meets six times a year and includes representatives of Aboriginal organizations and of the community at large. An honorarium is available for participation. The committee will meet for the remainder of the current term of City Council which ends in November 2022.

The application deadline is Wednesday, November 3. Any candidates selected for an interview will be contacted by staff, likely in mid-November. To learn more about this opportunity and apply online, visit <https://secure.toronto.ca/pa/decisionBody/722.do>
