Public Administration and Indigenous Governance Program

A renewed program run in partnership with the
First Nation Technical Institute, based at Tyendinaga
Mohawk Territory, and the Dept. of Politics at Toronto Metropolitan University.

About the Program

The Program offers three levels of learning, all rooted in Indigenous knowledge and pedagogy. Training the next generation of Indigenous leaders, the Program emphasizes critical and creative thinking; taking the governance challenges that communities face seriously and supporting the development of strategies, tools, and frameworks to address those challenges.

Who is eligible?

Mature students who do not possess either a high school diploma (OSSD) or post-secondary credential (diploma, degree) can apply if they are 21 years of age by December 31 of the year in which they will commence study, or if they have been away from formal education for at least two years.

The Program is delivered with Indigenous students in mind – those who are community-based, often from remote communities – and who are already employed, with additional family and community obligations.

Intensive Format

Courses in the Program are delivered in “intensive-mode” format. Instead of the traditional three hours a week for thirteen weeks, we offer courses over 4-5 days.

Hybrid Learning

Most courses are hybrid with elements that are both in-person and on-line. In-person courses are held in Toronto, Tyendinaga or Iqaluit.

Indigenous-Led

Courses are nearly exclusively taught by Indigenous academic and governance practitioners.

Rooted in Support

Students are supported by an Indigenous cultural advisor and student mentor.
